

SENATOR GRUNDY LASHES TARIFF FOES AND BLAMES THEM FOR UNEMPLOYMENT CONDITIONS NOW EXISTING IN THE U. S.

Idle Thousands Owe Plight to Senate Coalition, Pennsylvanian Tells Friendly Sons of St. Patrick—Says Sense Will Solve Internal Problems of America—Cites Erin's Growth Under Protection.

GUESTS OF ST. PATRICK'S NIGHT DINNER STIRRED BY FORCEFUL PLEA IN BEHALF OF HOME INDUSTRY

PHILADELPHIA, Mar. 18.—Senator Joseph R. Grundy in a speech here last night indicted tariff foes with being the cause of the unemployment throughout the country. The idle thousands owe their plight to the Senate coalition, the Pennsylvanian told the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick at annual dinner in Bellevue-Stratford.

"While vitally necessary economic legislation stagnates in the United States Senate, and the tariff needs of the country are kicked about by Democrats, joined by so-called Republicans who are bound by party principles only when they are candidates, thousands of men and women are walking our streets, unable to get jobs because their work is now being done in the low-wage countries of continental Europe."

Marshaling his facts and arguments for an "old-fashioned protective tariff," United States Senator Joseph R. Grundy thus laid responsibility for unemployment and industrial depression in the United States squarely upon the shoulders of the Senate coalition.

He was the principal speaker and the guest of honor last night at the 159th annual dinner of the Society of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick in the Bellevue-Stratford.

He drew a striking example from the present economic condition of the Irish Free State, which, he declared, "has obtained the most impressive results from an intelligent and patriotic application of the protective tariff doctrine."

Time after time the more than 1000 diners at the function interrupted the address of the junior United States Senator from Pennsylvania with bursts of vociferous and enthusiastic applause, as he drove home his arguments. As fearlessly and as staunchly as he pressed his arguments before the Senate, so last night he gave answer to his critics in that body.

Other speakers at the dinner of the Friendly Sons included Roland S. Morris, former Ambassador to Japan; Mayor Mackey, Monsignor John J. Mellon and Judge Frank Smith.

Senator Grundy spoke as follows:

It is a great pleasure and an esteemed privilege to be numbered among your guests tonight. Nevertheless, I am prompted to remind you that when the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick extend to a Quaker that hospitality for which the Society is so justly noted, you are merely adhering to a precedent established by your Irish forebears some two hundred and sixty-five years ago. For, as you will recall, it was in the year 1666, in Cork, Ireland, that William Penn was formally converted to the Quaker faith, by that noted Irish Quaker, Thomas Loe. And, by way of effectuating the union thus established between the Irish and himself, Penn speedily proved that he was not only an apostle of peace, but true to the traditions of the country he was in. He helped to throw a soldier out of Meeting, and thereby got himself thrown into jail. No wonder the Irish loved Penn and had faith in him! Those acts reflected two characteristics which any Irishman could understand.

There was about Penn's adoption of Quakerism that irony which so often flavors things happening in Ireland. I say irony, because it was, at least in part, to wean William from his increasing tendency toward Quakerism, that his father, Admiral Sir William Penn, sent the youth to the Penn's 3,000-acre estate near Shanangarry Castle, some twelve miles from Cork, which had been given to the elder Penn as a reward for his presumed loyalty to Cromwell, and the title to which, like so many things in Ireland, then was in dispute.

April 5th—Bread, pie and cake sale by Altar Guild of St. James's Church.

But however ironic the situation may have been, with its attendant circumstances of belligerent peacefulness, it was fortunate in its consequences. For, while Penn was not the first man, and certainly not the last, yet he is among the many of history whose character and determination were shaped within an Irish jail. That first arrest occurred when Penn was 23 years of age, and it was merely the forerunner of many experiences with jails, in which the Irish were not always so able, as they were in that initial instance, to effect his freedom. But the facts would seem to warrant the statement that it was that earliest arrest, resulting from Penn's insistence upon religious freedom, that turned his mind to ways and means by which that objective might be attained.

And I think it also may be said that had it not been for a Quaker, the Irish might have been slower in evidencing their first interest in America, while upon the other hand, had it not been for the Irish, a Quaker who adopted that faith in Ireland might never have been moved to translate his dreams of freedom into what has become an empire in itself—Pennsylvania.

Penn had tasted the hospitality of the Irish people and he responded in kind, not merely by opposing with all his ability the oppressions in Ireland, but likewise by fighting in England against the Penal Laws which then were being vigorously enforced against the Irish Catholics. And as a Quaker of Bristol myself (although this Bristol is in Pennsylvania) I take Quaker pride in the fact that it was from Bristol (although that Bristol was in England) that the founder of this Commonwealth did his most valiant fighting for Ireland and for the aims and aspirations of the Irish people wherever and whomever they might be.

But I am reminded that my theme is Pennsylvania; that Pennsylvania which William Penn founded, which the Irish almost usurped, which indeed a Deputy Governor of the Province publicly recorded himself as fearing they would so over-run as to take for themselves every public of (Continued on Page 3)

SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENT PREDICTS FOURTH "R"

J. Harry Hoffman Believes Religion Will Be Taught In Schools

AT MEN'S ASS'N MEETING

NEWTOWN, Mar. 18.—About 50 men forewent any inducement that may have come to them to take an auto spin and enjoy the spring out-of-doors on Sunday afternoon, and instead attended the second of the series of undenominational Lenten men's meetings in Arcade Hall.

The speaker was J. Harry Hoffman, of Doylestown, county superintendent of schools. Mr. Hoffman recounted some of the difficulties he has encountered in working for school consolidation. He expressed the feeling that in many instances the home has failed to do its part in training the youth along the lines of morality and religion, and he predicted that soon the fourth "R" would be added to the three that have heretofore formed the groundwork of our education, and the fourth "R" he said would be either "Religion" or "Rascality." He said he did not know just how religion would be taught, but he felt there was a need for something of the kind.

Mr. Hoffman declared that the Prohibition Amendment was not forced on the American people against their will. He said it was the result of 150 years of careful preparation, and that Congressmen who were themselves opposed to it and yet who voted for it, were afraid to go back home and face their constituents if they did not help it through.

Douglas LeCompte, of Hulmeville, sang very beautifully two solos, "He Knows the Way" and "Grateful, O Lord, Am I," to the piano accompaniment of Miss Marie Hanson, also of Hulmeville.

The chairman of the meeting was Evan T. Worthington, a minister of the Society of Friends, and clergymen of the town participated in the exercises.

The speaker next Sunday will be James Johnson, president of the Bible class of the Mount Airy Presbyterian Church, said to be one of the largest Bible classes in the country. The hour of the meeting is 3 p. m.

UNDERCOVER GETAWAY FREES "SCARFACE" AL

"Eased" Out of Prison to Another Jail and Then Released

TO PREVENT HARM

By James L. Kilgallen

(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

PHILADELPHIA, Mar. 18.—"Scarface" Al Capone, most talked of racketeer in America, was at liberty today after having served a ten months' sentence for carrying what the boys call a "rod." He made an "under cover" get-away that was so mysterious, and marked by such solicitude on the part of the authorities, as to provoke a furor that is re-echoing from one end of the City of Brotherly Love to the other.

Capone was spirited out of the Eastern Penitentiary here in one of the slickest coups ever devised by penal officials. The idea was, it was officially announced, to prevent any "bodily harm" befalling him for he has been widely reported that he is a marked man. He was "eased" out of the prison to another jail and then released in a manner that completely deceived more than one hundred newspaper men and photographers, to say nothing of the several thousand people who waited hour after hour to obtain a glimpse of the former Chicago beer baron as he emerged thru the big iron gate of the prison.

The unusual precautions of the authorities lent credence to rumors that members of rival gangs were awaiting anxiously for the release of Capone and his bodyguard, "Shippy" Frankie Cline, both of whom were freed simultaneously and both of whom were arrested at the same time and on the same charge.

Where Capone and Cline were today was a matter of conjecture. It was believed they had taken a train for Chicago, closely guarded by their friends.

The members of the Travel Club will spend Friday in Philadelphia, sight seeing in the Art Museum.

ELECTRIFIED TRAINS HERE BY JULY FIRST

Pennsy Locals to Abandon Steam at That Time, It Is Predicted

MAY USE "SUB" STATION

Local suburban trains on the Pennsylvania Railroad's New York division will be shifted from steam to electric operation as far as Trenton, beginning about July 1.

That prediction was made today by Pennsy officials, who, in announcing tentative plans for the change in service, said that for the early operation the electrification will apply only to the suburban trains and not to the through operation to New York.

It will be at least another year before the New York through service is in operation with electric locomotives, it was said. One of the possibilities is that the new underground station at 16th and Filbert streets, Philadelphia, will be ready for operation of the new electrified operation by July 1, but if that is not possible it is planned to inaugurate the new service out of Broad Street Station.

Commuters using Pennsy trains from Frankford, Frankford Junction, Bridesburg, Wissinoming, Tacony, Holmesburg Junction, Torresdale, Andalusia, Cornwells Heights, Croydon, Bristol, Edgely, Tullytown, Morrisville and Trenton will be affected by the change.

The former Miss Cohen, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a gown of white satin, with eulie bodice shirred. The veil was of lace and tulle. Miss Belle Cohen, sister of the bride, was maid of honor, and wore a frock of crepe in a soft tone of blue with slippers to match.

He took two drinks of "powerful whiskey" from two strangers he picked up along the highway near Cornwells Heights, Weber told the Court. A fine of $200 and costs was imposed.

Judge Keller marked the trial list for the March term of civil court that will open next Monday morning. There are forty cases listed for trial, but several have been continued for the term. There are five cases in the equity court.

So far Judge Keller has been unsuccessful in securing another Judge to assist him in the trial of cases, but it is likely there will be two judges sitting by the time court is called.

Greenberger is the son of the proprietor of the restaurant. Presser served as a waiter at the inn and attends a business college in Trenton at night.

The Court fined Greenberger $300, and costs and suspended sentence on Presser, warning Greenberger that if he or his father ever get in court again a substantial sentence will be imposed.

FIGHT TO AVOID CHAIR NOW ON IN EARNEST

Irene Schroeder Has Desperate Fight for Her Life

CLOSING STATE'S CASE

By Paul Glynn

I. N. S. Staff Correspondent
COURTROOM, NEW CASTLE, Pa., Mar. 18.—Irene Schroeder's battle to escape the little oak death chair at Rockview begins in earnest today.

Formal announcement of the resting of the Commonwealth's case, following a brief summation of the chain of evidence woven about the blonde defendant for the killing of Corporal Brady Paul of the State Highway Patrol, was scheduled soon after court convened for the morning session.

With the closing of the State's case, Thomas W. Dickey, chief legal bulwark in the defense camp, is expected to divulge, for the first time, what defense will be set up for Irene to refute and offset the testimony of the 100 State witnesses.

Dickey remained tight-lipped and reticent early today when queried as to what line the defense would follow. Despite his reluctance to place the defense cards on the table, the opinion prevailed that Dickey would attempt to show an inherent and innate criminal tendency that beset Irene, subjecting her to intermittent spells of "emotional insanity."

Tot Celebrates Her Fourth Birthday With Party

Dorothy Foster, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Foster, of Pine street, celebrated her fourth birthday on Monday afternoon by entertaining a few of her little friends. The party was held at the home of her grandmother, Mrs. Frances Conway, Walnut street, from three-thirty to five o'clock, and everybody had a good time playing various games.

A peanut scramble took place and Edward Terneson won the prize for finding the most peanuts; then came the game, "pinning the tail on the donkey" and Norma Albright received the prize. Elwood Smith was awarded a prize for finding the most taffies.

The children were then invited to the dining room where refreshments were served. Green and white crepe paper streamers gracefully hung from the center, over the chandelier to the table, and a large birthday cake with tangles formed the centerpiece on the table. Favors were green baskets filled with candy and green hats. Dorothy received many gifts.

Those present were: Norma, Charlotte and Wilbur Albright, Elwood Smith, Jean Wilson, Betty Albright, Ellen Coore, Doris Dolan, Dorothy Foster, Mary Terneson, Edward Terneson and Allan Hibbs.

Later, Mrs. Conway entertained the following guests for dinner, in honor of Dorothy's birthday: Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Foster and daughter, Dorothy, Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Terneson and son, Edward, and daughter, Mary, Mrs. Louise Bell, Mrs. A. Grooms, Jack Slonum and Adolph Paul.

HUGE STILL FOUND IN BRISTOL TOWNSHIP

Plant Valued at $5000 Raided By State Police From Doylestown

FIND PLENTY OF MASH

With the boiler "fired up" ready to start another shift, a monster alcohol manufacturing plant was seized Saturday afternoon by State Police from the Doylestown sub-station under the command of Corporal Francis.

The plant was located on the farm of Frank Lombardo, Bristol township, five miles from here, off the Bath Road. Lombardo was missing, but his wife and family were at home. Police expect to arrest Lombardo. He had previously told police that he had leased the barn on his place to a Philadelphia "for some purpose, he did not know what."

When police investigated two weeks ago they found the plant dismantled, but when they arrived on the scene Saturday the plant, it was found, had been in operation several hours before the police arrived.

Police valued the entire plant at close to $5,000. Fifty bags of coke were found in the barn and twenty-five empty five-gallon cans. One part of the still was twenty-five feet high. There were four vats in the cellar of the house fourteen feet long, twenty-two feet wide and eight feet deep and all were filled with mash. Seven gallons of alcohol were seized. There was evidence that a shipment had been made either Friday night or early Saturday morning.

The equipment was dismantled and taken to the County Prison at Doylestown.

STATEMENT SHOWS EXPENDITURES FOR BENSALEM SCHOOLS

Bldg. Program in Township District Involved Total of $150,000

MANY IMPROVEMENTS

Buildings Now Are in First Class Condition in Each Section

A school building program involving an expenditure of $150,000 has been completed in Bensalem Township which places the school buildings in the district in first class condition and provides ample school facilities for the children of the district.

The Bensalem Township High School dedicated Friday evening was the last unit of the system to be finished and with its completion a detailed statement has been made public by the Board of Education showing the cost of the various improvements.

The schools are Trexore, Edgington, Cornwells Heights, Center, Flushing, Hometown, Penn Valley and Andalusia. A survey of the school facilities in Bensalem shows the following conditions:

There was a new building constructed at Andalusia costing $21,162. This building was erected on a large lot adjacent to the old Andalusia public school ground. It is quite modern in every respect, is equipped with an excellent steam heating system, drinking fountains, laboratory facilities, heating and ventilating units, electric lights, mastic floors, wardrobes, lockers, blackboards and adjustable furniture.

It is a one story building of the extensionable type, which lends itself splendidly to future additions. It is so constructed and planned as to develop into as many as 22 class rooms if needed.

This new structure increases the classroom facilities from three to five, allowing an opportunity to relieve the congestion by adding one additional teacher to the faculty and by reassigning students. The first grade, numbering 25 pupils, is now located in one of the rooms of the new building, and is taught by Miss Margaret F. Pyle, who is concluding her third year as a primary teacher in the Andalusia school. Miss Verna Bieber, whose first year of teaching was done in the Center School, is instructing grades two and three, numbering 38 pupils, who are also housed in the new structure.

Grades four and five in the rear first floor room are under the supervision of Miss Rae Komenarski. The pupils of this group number 45. They are housed in the first floor room of the stone building.

Franklin C. Spittler, teaching principal of the Andalusia school, instructs grades six and seven, totaling 34 pupils, located in the front first floor room.

The cost of the general contract for the Andalusia building was $14,375. The heating and ventilating cost $1,588; the plumbing, $1,405; electrical work, $365; ground, $2,163.50; expenses on ground, $190; equipment and expenses on building, $1,165.50.

The first unit—two rooms—of a ten or twelve room building, is finished and it is the intention of the board to add additions thereto from time to time, and thus eliminate the old school building. This will permit the housing of all grammar school students in the new structure.

Until recently when the Junior-senior high school grades and the library were assigned to their new quarters on the second floor of the high school building at Cornwells Heights, the first four grades of the Cornwells school were housed in two asbestos buildings located to the rear of the main structure. These are no longer used.

The first grade, numbering 34 pupils, with Miss Anna Markley as instructor, occupies the spacious first floor room in the southwest corner of the main building. This room, while one of the two original rooms, and not as modern as the others, is well located for kindergarten and first grade work. It is planned to modernize it, and make it an up-to-date primary room in every respect.

Misses Hazel Gray, with 38 second and third grade students, now occupies Room 191, which recently housed (Continued on Page Four)

HAITI

So fair, honest and promising is the program drafted by the Haitian commission and approved by President Hoover and the Haitian leaders that the senate will hardly dare reject it. Public opinion here and in Haiti is behind the program.

This program is a genuine triumph for the spirit of goodwill and for the American genius for diplomacy and getting things done.

Five salient points in the program call for attention at the office of American high commissioner, election of a provisional president, selection of a legislature by a popular election, election of a president by the new legislature and a new treaty with the United States.

This program involves no sacrifice of American pride or power; in fact, it simply carries out the terms of the treaty whereby we entered Haiti.

But it would prove to Haiti and the world at large that Washington is not imperialistic and show the sincerity of American protestations of belief in self-determination and self-government of nations.

Whether the Haitians are intellectually and socially prepared for complete independence and self-government they may soon have a chance to prove. With or without American occupation, Washington cannot guarantee that the Haitians will live happy forever after like the lovers in the fairy tale.

FIRST

In a newspaper survey of the present economic position of the United States, Ogden I. Mills, under-secretary of the treasury, finds that in the past decade it has found itself in a position of preponderant power and influence in the world. He says:

"In the sphere of economic activity we have to a considerable degree set the course and the pace of world developments. In our foreign relations we have worked toward friendly cooperation between nations and have contributed much to the realization of those mutual advantages which attend common progress."

He disagrees with those who fix the period of our attainment to the status of a world power at so recent a time as the World War, declaring flatly that the United States was a world power long before 1914. Our rise to world dominance is usually dated from the war period because the nation's relative importance in every respect so largely increased in the last 10 or 15 years.

The rise of America to a position of preponderant power and influence was inevitable. The war may have hastened realization of that fact, but it was not essential to its attainment.

That which matters most now is not how its power and influence can be increased but how they can be put to the best use for all concerned.

Whatever have been the government's failures, income-tax, times reminds all of its success as a collector.

Foodless, freedomless, comfortless, peaceless Russia is trying to make the vacuum absolute by becoming Godless.

SYNOPSIS
Princess Eleonora, first engaged to King Leopold, Elector of Bavaria, has become the wife of General Crack, soldier of fortune. She is the price Leopold has reluctantly paid, for reasons of state, so that General Crack will fight on his side against the Allies, and make him Emperor. Crack, setting out on his campaign, has entrusted Eleonora, a stranger to him, to the old Duchess of Schönbrunn. General Crack leads the army to victory, and lays his plans at Brussels for the coronation of Leopold.

Christian with the Marchese De Lisle and several other French and Austrian officers, was in a large opposite to, but lower than that of the Emperor.

Count Hensdorff had not wished the Countess Carola to share these Imperial honors; but Leopold had willfully insisted, as he had again begun to find a certain consolation in the languishing charms of this black-eyed lady. She at least wholeheartedly admired him—or pretended to do so.

The musicians took their places, and there was tuning of violins and delicate instruments. Hensdorff suddenly remembered something that he had wished to say to Leopold all day. He leaned low behind the royal chair, and whispered: "That fellow Gabor, sire—do you still wish to see him?"

Leopold stared at the theatre at Christian, who was laughing with the French officers; in every gesture showing flaunting arrogance.

"Yes," and the Emperor, flatly. "I wish to see him. See that it is arranged, Hensdorff."

The Duchess Maria Luisa was also looking at Christian. She had indeed looked at nothing else except her programme since she had entered the theatre. Leopold noted her gaze, and said:

"I suppose to you he seems a very great hero indeed?"

And she replied, guardedly, from behind the plummy wave of her rosy fan:

"I suppose he has done very well, sire."

"Very well, as you may perceive," smiled Leopold, waving his hand round the theatre. "All this is owing to him, and we are enjoying it vastly—are we not, Luisa? You heard, too, how the people were all acclaiming him as we came in. Even out of respect to us they hardly silenced themselves."

"But it has all been for you, sire," replied Maria Luisa. "His victories have all been for you."

"And at a price," smiled Leopold; "at a price, my dear Luisa!"

The Archduchess thought curiously:

"That girl; he didn't want to give up that girl; I wonder what sort of creature she is. I should like to see her."

And she asked: "Why does not Prince Christian send for his wife? Why should she not come here to join in his triumphs?"

"She is safe in Ottenheim," said Leopold, still with that fixed smile; "she is far too precious for him to parade before the crowd."

"Yet from what I hear," replied the Archduchess, slightly, "she is nothing; only a pretty child."

"Nothing," murmured Leopold; "nothing!"

The Archduchess asked: "Cannot we have Prince Christian here with us in the box? I have not yet spoken to him and it would amuse me to do so."

"I am willing that he should come," replied Leopold, stiffly, "but both he and Hensdorff, who are our masters, you know, my dear Luisa, have arranged otherwise."

The orchestra began to play the overture, and the chattering conversation slackened a little.

Leopold was so fond of music that he became at once enamoured of the dancing melody, and leaned forward a little from his outcave seat, entranced to forgetfulness of the crowd by the new vision of heavenly kingdom conjured up by the elaborate, fantastic and sophisticated melody. He forgot Christian opposite, and joined the visionary company of Eleonora in the beechwoods on the Danube.

The curtain went up on an Eastern scene that sparkled with gems. Maria Luisa dared now to watch Christian. There was a circle of candles underneath his box, which threw a full light on his resplendent person. She could see him very clearly.

When the curtain went down on the first act, Maria Luisa suggested to her brother that Christian should be sent for; and this time, Leopold did not or could not demur. He spoke to Hensdorff, and Hensdorff spoke to an officer, and an officer to a page; and within a moment or two the victor of St. Omer was in the Imperial Box, towards which all eyes were now directed in a manner in which they had not been directed when it was occupied only by the Emperor and his sister.

Maria Luisa stirred, and motioned to the chair beside her. She appeared different from the tired woman who had greeted him in the corridor of the palace at Berlin. Her high, curled, powdered hair was crowned by a circlet of white, waxy, scentless hothouse flowers. The bodice on which sparkled the immemorially old jewels of the House of Austria was of rich blue velvet; her train was lined with ermine. She was fine, elegant, highly bred, fragile. For a second Christian, kissing her finger tips, amused himself by the reflection that he might on this occasion have sat beside this woman as her husband—an Imperial Archduke.

When the coquettish curtain went up again, Leopold drew back into the recesses of the box, abandoning the Imperial chair, to which none of the whispered inducements of Hensdorff could persuade him to return. The two women had gracefully detained Christian in the Imperial Box; very luxurious, very extravagant, strong and handsome, adorned by his obvious and showy successes, he stood between them; and Leopold noted that they both flattered him—Maria Luisa, with her majestic timidity, the Countess Carola with her languishing yet fiery air of enticement and promise. Both of them had forgotten Leopold and Hensdorff and the other ladies behind; with word and gesture and look, the praised, flattered, and paid homage to General Crack. Nothing could have been more odious or ridiculous to the Emperor.

Immediately the performance was over, Leopold left the box and retreated into the antechamber behind it, where wines and sweetmeats were served on tables of antique yellow marble covered with lace. He drew the curtains impulsively across the entrance to the box, but he could still hear the ovations coming from the theatre—the applause, once, twice and thrice renewed, given to Christian, the immense shouts of his name, of his praises—how easy to turn the heads of women and fools!

Leopold poured out wine from the first bottle to his hand—poured it out so violently that he spilled it across the marble table, and drank, and sat down heavily with his head in his hands. Hensdorff had followed him, and looked at him with a certain anxiety. He could understand that Leopold was torn with jealousy, and sympathized with the difficult position of the unhappy young man.

At last the ladies left the box, and came into the antechamber. Maria Luisa was elegantly leaning on the arm of Christian, and looking up into his face as if enraptured by the least change of his expression or the smallest word he deigned to speak; her small, frail person quivered with admiration.

Leopold groaned within his heart; he felt sick.

"How can she?" he thought to himself; "how can she? With that man, and after what has happened!"

But if his sister's behaviour gave him this poignant pang, he was even more sourly moved to see the admiration of the Countess Carola directed from himself to this victorious hero of a theatrical hour. That capricious beauty hardly glanced at Leopold, though he was glared at all his Imperial splendor; exercising all those arts which Leopold had once found so delicious, she competed with Maria Luisa for the graces of Christian, who appeared by no means indifferent. Leopold was unequal to this situation, as he had been unequal to every situation in which he had yet found himself. He rose heavily, and led the way from the theatre.

Christian shared his coach; green leather, lavishly padded, elaborately adorned, swinging lightly on the leathers, drawn by eight red-aparallel white horses. In the dark streets, the gathered people shouted for Christian, as in the bright theatre those others had shouted.

Senator Grundy Lashes Tariff Foes in Speech

that Pennsylvania which has been the Cradle of Liberty, the Keystone of the Nation, the pioneer of our national progress, the melting pot of the races, its people of many and mingled strains, one of which goes back to St. Patrick and to Erin.

Yet one hardly can speak of Pennsylvania without recalling the Ireland of today—the new Ireland as it exists in the Irish Free State. For while Pennsylvania drew its Quakerism from Ireland, the Irish Free State certainly must have drawn its economic precepts from Pennsylvania, in which so many of its sons and daughters happily abide, and provide such reunions as we are privileged to be participants in tonight.

Here in Pennsylvania this Nation had its birth, and here, likewise, in the same era, came into existence the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick, of which the Father of Our Country was an honorary member, and General Stephen Moylan, one of Washington's most trusted aides, the first president. But here, also more than anywhere else in the United States, we have responded to, and have developed under, that fundamental principle which is the basis of our economic independence and unequalled standard of living, which principle the Irish Free State is applying to its own development with a remarkable degree of success.

Before I take up the subject of Pennsylvania, I want to say a few words more about that country of your forebears, as it exists today under its own government. It is small in area and smaller still in terms of population. Its 3,000,000 people average only about 112 to the square mile, and the total number is only about two and a half per cent of the population of the United States. At first, therefore, its statistics may seem insignificant to those who have been accustomed to the stupendous figures in which we of America have been dealing, especially since the World War. But in a relative sense, and in terms of percentages, the Irish Free State has obtained the most impressive results from an intelligent and patriotic application of the protective tariff doctrine. And it is significant that practically everyone in the Irish Free State is a protectionist, the only difference between the two important political groups on that point being that one is more so than the other.

The reason that the people of the Irish Free State are protectionists is not difficult to find. Under protective duties, the number of boot and shoe factories increased 150% in a period of two years, while the number of persons employed therein rose by nearly two hundred per cent. In a single year the number of furniture factories jumped from 45 to 65, and while imports were cut in half, the number of employees was doubled. Despite a lack of skilled labor, and although the tariff duties almost invariably are upon the ad valorem basis, thus permitting under-valuation frauds, some of which have been discovered, there has been an addition of at least 150 industrial plants to the productivity of the Irish Free State, and many of the previously existing factories have been considerably enlarged.

This has encouraged the development of hydro-electric power from the Shannon, to supplant the more costly importation of coal for industrial fuel, and this in turn has resulted in more and more applications for manufacturing sites within the zone of this new power. In both agriculture and industry the Irish Free State is upon the up-grade, to an extent that is showing not only in an improved standard of living, but in constantly increasing bank deposits and a growing number of small but significant savings accounts.

It is in the matter of employment, however, that the direct results of this constructive economic policy are more clearly seen; and when it is said that as between the time when the protective duties were imposed, and September, 1929, there was an increase of thirteen thousand, or 120 per cent, in the number of persons directly employed, we come to something which gives us a basis for turning our attention back to this country and to our own State of Pennsylvania.

For, were we to receive from Congress the protective rates which would accelerate our own industries in a like ratio, we would instantly have enough new or revived employment to engage some 500,000 persons, or, to bring the situation nearer to home, enough jobs to give regular and profitable work to the vast numbers of unemployed who are walking the streets and highways of Pennsylvania and other eastern industrial States, unable to find the means of earning a livelihood.

Speaking of it as a governmental unit, Pennsylvania is sound. Its financial system has been solidified and put upon a thoroughly business-like budget basis. The recent session of the Legislature, as you know, created the new Department of Revenue, and I think it is safe to say that in no Commonwealth are the citizens receiving more for their money, in the modern and multiple functions of State Government, than are the people of Pennsylvania.

But when we come to view the situation from the standpoint of individual and corporate welfare, we find discouragement, and, in many instances, actual distress prevailing in many parts of our State. Several factors are contributing to this situation, but the major causes should be matters of serious concern.

First of all, I would like to call your attention to some facts which cannot be too often emphasized. We have in Pennsylvania, according to the triennial farm census of 1927, a farm population of 761,486, the annual value of whose output is somewhere in the neighborhood of a billion dollars annually. Inasmuch as you can add together the agricultural output of six or seven of those States of the South and West whose productivity is in agriculture almost solely, and the total will not reach that of Pennsylvania alone, it is apparent that this farm development in our own State is a big and important thing—in an actual as well as a relative sense.

It is in industry, however, that we stand out predominantly before the entire Nation. In 1928, one million four hundred thousand of our people were employed in our manufacturing enterprises, turning out products valued at $7,331,000,000, and, in addition, by-products valued at $1,118,000,000, or a total of almost eight and a half billions of dollars. This industrial output not only exceeded that of all the New England States combined, but likewise exceeded the entire industrial output of twenty States of the South and West, which comprise more than sixty per cent of our continental area. The 29 States to which

I refer are: New Mexico, Nevada, North Dakota, South Dakota, Wyoming, Idaho, Utah, Arizona, Arkansas, Mississippi, Montana, Florida, Colorado, South Carolina, Oklahoma, Nebraska, Kansas, Iowa, Minnesota and Texas.

The products of our steel works and rolling mills run above a billion dollars a year. Silk manufactures, and foundry and machine shop products, each exceed $300,000,000 per annum. In the list between $200,000,000 and $300,000,000 are electric machinery and supplies, iron and steel (blast furnaces), and knit goods. Between $100,000,000 and $200,000,000, in the order of their standing, are: car construction and railroad repair shops, newspapers and periodicals, petroleum refining, bakeries, slaughtering and meat packing, cigars and cigarettes, leather, and coke. Of the seven largest industries in the United States, measured by the value of annual product, Pennsylvania ranks first in four of them, second in three, third in two, and fourth in two. As a matter of fact, there is scarcely a substantial industry in the entire country that is not importantly represented. (Continued on Page Four)

THE EXAMPLE OF KING KHAMA OF BECHUANALAND

To the Editor of the Public Ledger: Sir—Quoted from Helen Barrett Montgomery's missionary study "From Jerusalem to Jerusalem":

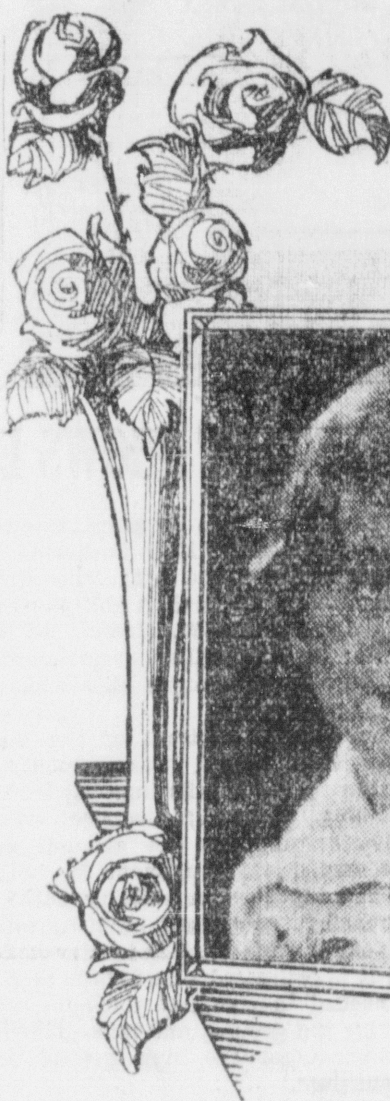

"When Khama (converted Prince of the Bechuans of Africa) first became King (1872), he prohibited the importation of liquor and the making of native beer. These laws he rigidly enforced for the protection of his people. But the white traders in liquor ran true to form. They began to break the King's law and smuggle liquor into the country. The King warned them again and again, then he acted swiftly, powerfully and remorselessly. He called the white men into his presence and said:

"Take all that is yours and go. Leave my town and never come back again." On the ground of old friendship one dealer pleaded for pity. Khama flashed back: "Friendship! You know better than any one how much I hate this drink. Don't talk to me about friendship! You are my worst enemy."

And this by the black King Khama nearly sixty years ago!

BOSTON RED SOX GETTING INTO FORM AT PENSACOLA

PENSACOLA, Fla., Mar. 18.—Under a new manager, Charles (Heinie) Wagner, the Boston Red Sox, "cellar champs" of the American League, are rapidly rounding into form at Pensacola Park. They are a young, lively aggregation and, according to Wagner, "may cause plenty of trouble around the Circuit this year."

Wagner would make no predictions as to where the Red Sox would finish in 1930 but he will be greatly disappointed if they do not make a notable showing from the opening game.

He realizes he has inherited a hard job in taking over the management of a club that the veteran and experienced field general, Bill Carrigan, could not make into a winner.

"Ours is a young club and it may take time to get them up in the running," Wagner told International News Service. "If we start this season like we finished last year we will cause plenty of trouble. Ours was a pretty good club the last two months of last season."

"I need a couple of good hitters more than anything else. Give this team a little more batting punch and we will be tough to beat. We are well fixed with pitchers and the spirit and morale of the club is great."

Wagner said he has five first class pitchers and several others who look very good. His favorite five pitchers at present are "Big Ed" Morris, who won 14 and lost 14 with the club last season in spite of the fact that Boston finished last; Charlie Ruffing; Milton Gaston; Jack Russell and Danny Macfayden. All are right handers and hard workers.

Several of the rookie pitchers look good according to Wagner, but he thought it a little too early to pass judgment upon their merits as big league material. Wagner is shy on southpaw material. Of the eighteen pitchers in camp only two are "lefties." Of the right hand rookies Wagner said he had been impressed by 23 year old Frank Mulrooney, a Malard, Iowa, youth who won 13 games and lost 8 with Pittsburgh last season.

Wagner declared he had not made up his mind regarding the infield. Several hard hitters up from the minors are trying for the places of the regulars who did not hit so powerfully with Boston last season.

Bill Sweeney, who hit .335 with Toronto last year, is after the veteran Phil Todd's position at first base. Todd hit .262 last year for the Red Sox. Otis Miller, who hit .347 for Milwaukee in 1929, is trying hard for Bill Regan's job at second base. Regan's batting average last year was .288 and he will be hard to oust. The shortstop post has developed into a battle between Harold Rhyne and Bill Narlesky who hit .252 and .277, respectively, for Boston last year. Ernest Holman, who batted .307 at Shreveport last season, is trying to land Bob Reeves' job at third base. Reeves hit only .248 with the Red Sox last season.

"The outfield probably will be made up of Bill Barrett in right, Jack Rothrock in center and Russell Scarritt in left, all young and experienced players," said Wagner.

"I expect most of our catching will be done by Johnny Heying and Charlie Berry, with Bob Ashbjornson, up from Pittsfield where he hit .350 last year, helping them out."

The new Red Sox manager has been giving his club hard daily workouts. Wagner believes in a lot of running for his players to strengthen their underpinning and he has made good use of the quarter-mile cinder path at the ball park. He will take a fast, ambitious young club back up north for the opening of the regular season.

ed in Pennsylvania's gigantic industrial structure.

Hence, while the Keystone State is second to New York in value of manufactured products, and very slightly so in the number of persons industrially employed, we have in Pennsylvania a greater concentration of big industries than exists in any other State in the Union. The million and four hundred thousand persons directly employed in our manufacturing activities are representative of about seven million of our population who are directly dependent upon those industries for their existence. At least another two million—those who are engaged in banking and business, in the professions, in merchandising, in the vocations and trades—are indirectly dependent upon the healthy operation of our industries for their own material well-being.

This is the army—more than seven times the number that our entire country poured into Europe in the World War—which furnishes the market not only for the products of our own extensive and highly developed agriculture, but, together with other eastern seaboard States, consumes a great part of the farm products of the Central and Western States.

Now, with this picture before us, let us review a few facts which ought to have the most serious consideration of every citizen of Pennsylvania.

In 1928, the number of industrial employees in Pennsylvania was nearly 50,000 less than in 1927.

In 1928, the wage-earners' payroll in Pennsylvania had diminished by more than $60,000,000, as compared with the preceding year.

In 1928, the capital invested in Pennsylvania industries had shrunk by $203,815,000, or was nearly a quarter of a billion dollars less than was the sum of that investment in 1927.

The figures for 1929 are not yet available, but the devastation has continued, as we all know without the aid of statistics. The evidences are all about us, and they are so impressive that they cannot be ignored.

In other words, while vitally necessary economic legislation stagnates in the United States Senate, and the tariff needs of the country are kicked about by Democrats joined by so-called Republicans who are bound by party principles only when they are candidates, thousands of men and women are walking our streets, unable to get jobs because their work is now being done in the low-wage countries of continental Europe.

Not only has this Coalition defeated practically every attempt that has been made to enact duties which would preserve the domestic market to American industry and labor, but in important instances the duties in the Act of 1922 actually have been cut down to those of the notoriously non-protective tariff of 1913.

Small wonder that Matthew Woll, vice-president of the American Federation of Labor and chairman of the American Wage Earners' Protective Conference, says in a letter addressed to each member of the Senate:

American Labor views with great alarm and much apprehension the failure of the Senate to provide ample and full protection against foreign competition and the invasion of our home market by foreign commodities made under, in many instances, intolerable conditions of employment.

With the ever-increasing number of unemployed, from our bitter experience, we know the plight of America's wage-earners will become frightful if the effort to tear down the protective wall of American industry and labor is permitted to find sanction and approval by our American Congress. We question what good it will do American labor to have restricted the immigration of foreign workers if, at the same time, the doors are thrown open to the free importation of products and commodities produced abroad.

Yes, Mr. Woll is right. This problem of unemployment is daily becoming more acute. I am receiving hundreds of letters upon the subject, not only from the unemployed of our own State, but from those who are without work in many other States. For example, the following is an excerpt from a letter written by a man in Caledonia, New York:

The American people elected Mr. Hoover because he stood for protection for American workmen. I hope he will veto this tariff bill that Western Republicans and Southern Democrats have been working on for the last eighteen months, because I honestly believe it is the worst tariff that was ever drawn up under a Republican administration. No wonder we hear a song coming in from some of those Canadian radio stations that make fun of us something like this:

"Three rousing cheers
For the Red, White and Blue;
Are you working, Bill?
No! Are you?"

That may strike a humorous chord, but let me read from just one other, which comes from a woman who lives in Tacony.

We have in Philadelphia today thousands of first class textile workers who are out of work and cannot get jobs of any kind.

All around us are idle mills, idle machinery, idle men and women, and the factories are going to ruin. Apparently everything that one wishes to buy is now manufactured for us in Europe, while thousands of our own unemployed workers are on the verge of starvation. America always made first class goods heretofore. How is it that we have gone to the dogs?

It probably would not be fair to say that the whole of the situation referred to in that letter is the result of a lack of effective tariff protection, but to the extent that adequate duties would afford relief, the failure to provide them is indefensible.

Much is being said about the increasing migration of American capital. In constantly larger sums it is going to low-wage foreign countries. There it is invested in mills and machinery operated by low-paid foreign labor, and then in many instances the products of that labor are exported to the United States, to compete with similar products made here by domestic labor which is paid the American scale of wages. We cannot, by any legislative means, put a stop to such migration of American capital; but by the enactment of proper tariffs we can put an end to the premiums that we have placed upon it.

the high school library. This room is nicely equipped and modern.

Room 109 is the home room of a section of third grade and the fourth grade students. They are taught by Miss Elizabeth B. McLees, the enrollment being 45.

Grades five and six, totaling 53 pupils, are taught in Room 107. Miss Helen R. Andrews is in charge of grade five, and Miss Catherine L. Helrich is the home room teacher for grade 6. The teaching is done in departmental fashion.

The high school is well organized with the following faculty: Supervising principal, Samuel K. Faust, problems of Democracy; Miss Cecilia Snyder, science and mechanical drawing; Miss Alice K. Siddons, Latin and French; Miss Emily Schroeder, history and library; Miss Jane Kohler, English; Miss Olive Sargeant, English and mathematics; Miss Catherine L. Helrich, music and art; Miss Ruth S. Hansen, social studies and physical education; Anson M. Hamm, mathematics; Guy K. Miller, social studies and physical education; Miss Alma I. Kink, commercial.

This total is to March 1st, and it is estimated that $23,896.24 will be needed to complete the contracts, pay for the ground, and miscellaneous equipment for the high school and gymnasium.

The repairs and improvements at the Eddington school cost $3,178.30. Laboratories and wardrobes were installed on both floors, composition that this addition will take care of the floors laid throughout the building, and a fire escape erected.

The Eddington school is a two-room stone building, new mastic floors having been laid, and the building made sanitary.

Miss Fannie Dunkle has charge of 25 pupils in grades one, two and three. Robert M. Allison is teaching principal of the Eddington school, and teaches grades four, five, six and seven, and has an enrollment of 34 pupils.

A one-room rural school is Hermitage, situated one mile and a half west of Hulmeville. In this building Miss Verna Soit has charge of 34 pupils. The building houses the first five grades. A new hot water heater was recently installed at the Hermitage school.

Four class rooms, two completed and two unfinished, and a basement for the heating apparatus, was added to the Trevoise school. It is estimated that this addition will take care of the needs of Trevoise for the next three or four years. The addition cost $13,944.40, the general contract being $9,739.40; heating and ventilating, $2,395; plumbing, $448; electrical work, $425; equipment for building, $37.

The capacity of the building has about doubled. Previously there were three regular class rooms and a furnace room. There are now seven class rooms, and a furnace room, a basement play room, a library room, a room for boys and a room for girls, as well as spacious corridors.

The first grade is taught by Miss M. Arabella Ehrlen; grades two and three, Miss Beatrice L. Zarr. These grades number 30 pupils and are located in one of the new rooms just constructed. The fourth room, numbering 22, enjoys a separate room and is taught by Miss Helen Gee. Grades five and six under Miss Regina M.

Neely, numbering 30 pupils, occupy a front room on the second floor; and grades seven and eight, taught by John Sollenberger, the teaching principal of the school, number 34 pupils.

Along the Lincoln highway close to Street Road, is located the Penn Valley school building. This attractive structure is quite well equipped. A new hot water heater has just been installed. The primary grades, one to four, totaling 32 pupils, are in charge of Miss Josephine Donnelly.

H. Bowers Peters is teaching principal of the Penn Valley school, having charge of boys and girls in grades five to eight. The enrollment in this room is 23.

Miss Laura Baird instructs 21 pupils in six grades at Hermitage school, which is located along the Nesaminy Creek.

At Centre school there are 38 students in five grades, the teacher of the group being Miss Beatrice L. Blake.

other industrial country that I know of, they do not place the burden of proof upon their own industries and their own labor. They go upon the old-fashioned theory that perhaps their own people are at least as honest as those of other lands who are seeking to gain markets there, and they consider facts as being sound and legitimate evidence.

They believe, as the lawmakers of this country used to believe, that the prima facie establishment of a tariff need is sufficient ground for meeting that need. They go upon the theory that was so well expressed by the Federal Revenue Commission which laid the whole groundwork for the protective tariffs that we had in the forty-five years following the Civil War.

Upon this very question of the right and propriety of domestic manufacturers and domestic labor presenting to Congress the facts relating to their tariff requirements, the Commission spoke forcefully, frankly and fearlessly, as follows:

There is every reason why this attempt should be made among those specially concerned in the various departments of labor, by confronting those whose interests are regarded as adverse. It is enough for the public authorities, upon full consideration of what private parties have in this manner stated, conceded, proved and suggested, to determine what should receive the sanction of legislation, and become a national policy to be relied upon as established and permanent.

And then:

It is just as important, if private capital is to be invited or encouraged to invest in productive industry, to make the terms favorable, as it is if the invitation be to invest in national bonds. And if the ability of the country to pay heavy taxes is to be maintained and increased as a provision for future exigencies, every stimulant and security should be offered to capital and labor which the country can command. Whatever may be the adjustment of the burden of taxation, it will be found that the larger the amount in value of national production, the more diffused will be the burden, and the lighter will it bear upon those who carry it.

For years that principle prevailed in the framing of our protective tariff measures. It was perhaps nowhere more forcefully expressed in our public life than by Chairman Dingley, of the Ways and Means Committee, when the Dingley Bill of 1897 was being drafted. Chairman Dingley said:

Protection is the great purpose of the bill which will be introduced in the next Congress. Protection to American industries will be the actuating motive in framing the bill, and that protection which is needed will be given. It matters not whether the duties necessary to give that protection be high or low; that has nothing to do with it. It is protection that we are after.

That was a sound and patriotic philosophy. We need more of it today. I am one of those who do not believe that the traditions and institutions of this country can be preserved, nor that our material well-being can be maintained, much less be advanced, by abandonment of those sound doctrines and principles which have brought us to our present position. Speaking in a national sense, I believe that patriotism, like charity, begins at home—that our first interest and concern are the United States of America and the preservation thereof as a self-contained, self-supporting, self-respecting Nation.

The major problems that confront the country today are economic problems. No State has a more vital concern in them than has Pennsylvania. The safety of our vast investments and the welfare of our people are bound up in them. We are in an economic era, and the difficulties which are a part of it can only be successfully solved by economic sound sense. If that be applied, and in a spirit of broad nationalism which recognizes that all parts of our country are interdependent, we need not fear that we have any internal problems which cannot be solved in accord with justice and consistent with reason.

KONJOLA ENDED UNTOLD MISERY IN QUICK TIME

Grateful Lady Tells How New Medicine Won Speedy Victory Over Stubborn Ailments

MRS. LYDIA J. BERKEY

"I suffered for years with stomach and liver trouble," said Mrs. Lydia J. Berkey, Route No. 2, Boswell, near Johnstown. "My kidneys were weak and there was not a day that I did not suffer from back pains. Bilious attacks and severe headaches caused by liver weakness often made my work impossible. Frightful pains often followed the simplest meals and I bloated terribly. My entire system was run down and I was utterly discouraged."

"It is a different story now, for I have taken Konjola. This great medicine went right to work in my case. It was but a short time before this medicine restored my kidneys to their normal state and the back pains disappeared entirely. My liver, too, soon cleared up and now functions properly. I have an excellent appetite and eat what I wish without gas accumulation or discomfort. My entire system has been rebuilt and strengthened until I am again in perfect health." Konjola is sold in Bristol at Hoffman's Cut Rate store and by all the best druggists in all towns throughout this entire section.—(Adv.)
